EUAN MACLEOD

Smoking craters, volcano man and a ladder to a painted heaven – Euan Macleod's recent paintings create an emotive and compelling exhibition that fills the gallery's entire space. Taken as one, the paintings could depict the many scenes and dramas of a labyrinthine dream and it is a formidable task taking in their multifarious meanings and symbols in one viewing, let alone deciphering the actions of the anonymous male figure who resides in most of them. Running through sand-filled drawing rooms, brooding in harbour rock pools or standing inside a thick smoke ring like his own nuclear explosion, this man seems like a ghost touring his own past. Watters Gallery, 109 Riley Street, East Sydney, 9331 2556. Tue-Sat 10am-5pm; Wed, Thu and Fri 10am-7pm. Until June 11.
